(54) Title: NON-INVASIVE DETECTION OF HELICOBACTER PYLORI INFECTION(57) Abstract

The present invention relates to a kit and method of purifying DNA from stool samples of vertebrate species. The DNA is recovered in sufficient purity to allow the DNA to be amplified by PCR, thus allowing the identification of pathogenic organisms present in the digestive tract.

V. Reasoned statement under Article 35(2) with regard to novelty, inventive step or industrial applicability; citations and explanations supporting such statement

1. statement

Novelty (N)

Claims	1-17	YES
Claims	NONE	NO

Inventive Step (IS)

Claims	NONE	YES
Claims	1-17	NO

Industrial Applicability (IA)

Claims	1-17	YES
Claims	NONE	NO

2. citations and explanations (Rule 70.7)

Claims 1-17 lack an inventive step under PCT Article 33(3) as being obvious over Cover et al. The claims are drawn to a method for isolating amplifiable nucleic acids from a solid stool sample, comprising solubilizing the sample, mixing it with a chaotropic agent such as a detergent, heating it, separating the precipitate from the lysed cell solution, extracting the protease solution, and recovering the nucleic acids.

Cover et al teaches obtaining DNA from a stool sample and digested by restriction endonuclease and comparing the results of different strains.

Cover et al. do not teach using a detergent to separate the DNA from the stool sample. It was well known in the art, however, at the time of the invention to wash stool samples prior to the isolation of nucleic acids. This was well known because it would have been considered an essential step in the isolation of nucleic acids.
